Autor: xxx keygen latest version:-Petersen | Foto:.Systemic melanoma metastases: 1H-magnetic resonance spectroscopy in skeletal muscle at 3 T: (1)H MRS correlates with stage and tumor burden and can predict survival. (1)H MRS is a technique that allows in vivo assessment of skeletal muscle metabolism. Its potential clinical application as a noninvasive method to assess disease progression is limited by low sensitivity. There is a need to develop local tumor detection methods capable of differentiating tumor from tumor-free skeletal muscle. The aim of this study was to examine the potential of (1)H MRS in skeletal muscle to detect melanoma and correlate metabolic alterations with clinical and histopathologic variables and patient survival. Correlative, descriptive study. Thirty patients with melanoma and 30 patients with benign skin lesions who underwent surgical excision were prospectively studied. (1)H-magnetic resonance spectroscopy was performed at 3 T. Group means for the relative integral of metabolites were compared with a one-way analysis of variance test. Survival analysis was performed. Skeletal muscle metabolites differed significantly between melanoma and benign skin lesions (P =.004). Low-intensity area presence (P =.001), tumor thickness (P =.0005), tumor size (P =.0005), and serum albumin (P =.002) were significantly higher in patients with a malignant process, whereas lactate, free fatty acids, total creatine, and phosphocreatine (PCr) were significantly lower. There was a significant difference in survival depending on tumor thickness (P =.01) and lactate (P =.05), whereas no difference was found
