The US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) has reported a significant increase in the number of measles cases over the past year. In a report released on Wednesday, the CDC said measles was declared eliminated in the United States in 2000. In 2017, some states are reporting more than half of all cases of the virus. A majority of the cases reported in 2017 were unvaccinated people, according to the report. Most of the cases occurred in New York, which accounted for nearly half of all cases in 2017. Mumps and rubella were also added to the list of the reported diseases on Wednesday. The CDC said one child died from bacterial meningitis and another died of complications resulting from mumps. The two cases of mumps were reported in Massachusetts, while four deaths from complications resulting from rubella were reported in Indiana and Ohio. “Measles is a vaccine-preventable disease, but often children are not vaccinated due to misinformation,” said Mr Thomas Frieden, director of the CDC. “For the first time in over 20 years, we have states in the US that are on the verge of losing the public health benefit of herd immunity to measles. “That’s not a safe situation for anyone – especially young children.” The agency said it was monitoring the situation closely and hoped to reduce the number of cases in 2018. The CDC advised anyone with the measles virus or who may have been exposed to the virus to call ahead to their health care provider before showing up for their appointment. “Clinicians can do a rapid and accurate diagnosis with a simple blood test and the most effective way to stop a measles outbreak is to get two doses of the measles vaccine,” said Ms Meera Sankaran, acting director of the National Center for Immunisation and Respiratory Diseases. The CDC said it was urging anyone who did not have the vaccination for their children and who may have been exposed to the virus to schedule their doctor’s visit to ensure they are protected from the virus.

calculations are carried out for the cis-trans isomerization of small alkyl olefins, acetylene, benzene, and cyclohexene. The transition state geometries are optimized using DFT methods including B3LYP, B3PW91, TPSS, and PBE and are compared with those obtained from the approximate coupled-cluster singles and doubles (CCSD) theory. An evaluation of the method's effectiveness in predicting the cis-trans isomerization reaction barrier for these systems is presented. The results obtained from the B3LYP and TPSS functionals are compared to the benchmark CCSD results.Alabama Football: Tide Preparation for Jan. 6 Spring Game Alabama football fans have been counting down the days for the annual spring game on Saturday, January 6.
