Note There are four types of layers: masks, filters, Smart Objects, and compound layers. These are different from layer types (other than the last two listed, all types are subcategories of layers). Most Photoshop users use layers, and virtually all image editors use layers. It may seem to the beginner that Photoshop is more complicated than other image editors, but a true Photoshop user is like an all-purpose chef.

Q: Spring Webflux - Multiple URL's with identical method I have a CRUD app with a repository and route builder. I can define an URL for every single method in the repository - e.g. localhost:8080/things/new However, the route builder has a @PathVariable that can be a type of Thing. I can do localhost:8080/things/{thingType}/new but the problem is that this would seem to mean that all my URLs would lead to a single method with no path variable - the result would be localhost:8080/things/new How can I get around this? A: As you guessed, you have two options: Either you have the canonical method that accepts a parameter called thingType or you have several methods in which the parameters are binding related and it is easy to distinguish which one is the current binding. I prefer the second approach. Spring WebFlux just provides us a way to bind our request mapping together. If we can create multiple methods, we can bind them together, because the mapping is the same for them. If there is no parameter and it is not important, we can put in a default value. @GetMapping("/things/{thingType}") public String thingGetWithDefaultType(@PathVariable("thingType") String thingType) { // Do something with 'thingType'... return "..."; } @GetMapping("/things/{thingType:}") public String thingGetWithSpecificType(@PathVariable("thingType") String thingType) { // Do something with 'thingType'... return "..."; } // Default mapping for people that don't know what to do @GetMapping("/things") public String thingGetDefaultType(HttpServletResponse response) { // Do something with response... return "..."; } If you have a very small number of URLs, the former approach may be more easier. Rapid identification of allergens of Fasciola hepatica using an ELISA test. We present a rapid method for the determination of allergenic components of Fasciola hepatica using an enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay (ELISA). The assay is based on the use of polyclonal antibodies raised in mice against different natural compounds extracted from the metacercariae, for the detection of allergenic components of the parasite. We identified three Fasciola hepatica allergenic compounds using polyclonal antibodies: one protein of molecular weight 38 kDa, and two glycoproteins of molecular weight 25 kDa and 19 kDa. The presence of allergenic components was confirmed by the inhibition of the ELISA when the parasite extract was previously absorbed with protein A from Staphylococcus aureus. The demonstration of allergenic components of Fasciola hepatica could be a useful tool in the diagnosis of human fascioliasis, and might contribute to the design of immunotherapies and immunosuppressive agents to be used in endemic areas.Junkaar Junkaar is an Indian fictional superhero from the Indian TV series Superherogirl.
