Keygen 1. public health interests. In addition, the historical and theoretical background to the idea of ethics in public health is examined with respect to its role in our understanding of the nature of public health and related disciplines such as public policy and social medicine. Examining cases in which public health ethics has been used in the attempt to improve the quality of health care for citizens, potential benefits and potential harms are discussed. Some recent proposed requirements of public health ethics are examined and it is concluded that the notion of public health ethics has matured enough so that clear concepts of obligations and rights can be identified. While there are no clear moral requirements of the public health community, clear suggestions for ensuring ethical behavior can be made. It is my intent to examine the ethics of "crossing the border" so that we might better understand the complexity and challenges involved in this emerging field of public health. "Crossing the Border" refers to taking an individual or population who live in one country and move into another, while often living in the same building or neighborhood in the "new" country. "Across the Border" refers to sending members of one or more populations to a country to receive the needed medical services. It is my intent to do more than survey the surface of the subject. I will examine both the issues and methods employed in the development of a cross border public health program in Belgium and Nicaragua. An analysis of factors influencing the development and/or efficacy of cross border public health programs will be undertaken. Issues of efficacy will be examined with specific regard to the lessons learned in the field of cross border public health. The overarching goal of the project is to support the perspective of multilevel public health and intersectoral action, particularly with respect to health promotion among adolescents and adults. The project will examine the key documents in the development of multilevel public health and intersectoral action by the Public Health Agency of Canada and the National Collaborating Centres. In a bi-national context, this will be done through communication and collaboration with five other public health actors in Quebec and from the Federal government. A specific emphasis will be placed on exploring the public health perspective of dissemination of research findings. This study examines the relationships between Aboriginal health and public health. It focuses on two issues
