FULL HASH NALEBHAN (Hindi) Download, Full HASH Â .Q: Many to Many in a table In a best practice, what is the best approach when you have many to many relationship between two tables? I'm thinking that creating new table with id's of both tables and concatenate them would be a good option. Is this a good approach or it is not a best practice? A: You have to consider all the tradeoffs to the design and the performance on each approach as well as following your own standards. if you have an existing table (more design work) if you have a high number of joins (more performance) if you want people to be able to add new records from any side (more design) As the rules of thumb is that you design to minimize the query times and if you have to do performance tuning use only indexed columns or columns with the largest number of joins and you make sure that not too many indexes exist. #include "MultiTextureImage.h" #include #include #include #include #include "tracker/interface/Geom.h" using namespace cglt; MultiTextureImage::MultiTextureImage(const QUrl& url, double scale, bool colorized, bool transposed, bool apply, QGraphicsOpacityEffect* opacityEffect) :

QGraphicsImage(url), _scale(scale), _colorized(colorized),
_transposed(transposed), _apply(apply),
_opacityEffect(opacityEffect) { }
