Student Educated on Social Media Content Drexel University students in the College of Arts and Sciences participated in the school's first social media education event on May 13, with a panel including representatives from the Philadelphia Inquirer, Dow Jones/U.S. News, Pulitzer Prize-winning columnist Thomas Friedman, and MSNBC. The panel discussion, titled "Social Media Is Not a Crime," was co-sponsored by the College of Arts and Sciences in partnership with the College of Communication and Center for the Study of Philanthropy. University officials said the experience drew a large turnout, with 12 students and five Penn professors in attendance. The six-hour event included speakers and panelists discussing issues surrounding social media and the media's relationship with the Internet. "Social media and media outlets have shaped our world in many important ways, as we live and work and learn each day," said longtime college faculty member Bob Schiffman, who moderated the event. "This discussion was designed to help all of us better understand the evolving landscape." Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences Robert H. Smith Jr. said the panel represented a highly productive effort. "Social media and journalistic issues have long been topics of significant interest to me and my colleagues in the College of Arts and Sciences," Smith said. "The collaboration between the Journalism, Health Sciences, and Design Interdepartmental Forum and the College of Arts and Sciences in hosting this event was extremely well received. "We are all in this together as we address the challenges and opportunities created by new media outlets." The panelists attended each other's class lectures and offered constructive feedback, said college Dean Arnold D. Hirsch. "This presentation was a valuable learning experience for all the participants," Hirsch said. "We came away with a better sense of our many challenges and opportunities, and were encouraged by their engagement and suggestions." Penn Professor of Journalism Mark Schreiber was invited to attend by the College of Arts and Sciences. "The ability to share thoughts and experience with peers, including those at other institutions in the world, is one of the cornerstones of the Penn faculty network," Schreiber said.
