Font style: Cambri, Dow, Hansari,.NOVO-OSKOLOCHI, Russia (AP) -- Masha Tetyukova lived with her baby sister and other siblings in a rundown three-room home in a small village deep inside Russia's Siberia. Life for the eight-year-old was far from easy. In 1998, two years after the Soviet Union collapsed, Tetyukova's father went to work in a coal mine and the family moved to Novo-Oskolochi, a hardscrabble village in the Chukotka region on the Russia's eastern Pacific coast. Today, the two-room house Tetyukova grew up in, surrounded by fields and forest, is a model of modern living in an area beset by a serious housing shortage. The village is home to about 15,000 people, about a quarter of whom are children. About 30 people live in the area which is about the size of a small town. Even more striking is the 0cc13bf012
