The monitoring system is typically embedded into the circuits that make up the vehicle and is used to test the operation of those circuits. Such a monitoring system enables the use of the vehicle within a safe range. Circuit boards and other electrical components are typically comprised of many electronic devices electrically connected by a set of electrical traces which are formed on the surface of the board. The reliability of each electrical component and electronic circuit in the board can be improved if each trace is able to provide a known path to a power source. In addition, current is able to flow more efficiently, especially with high current components that require greater thermal dissipation, if there is a reliable trace that remains conductive in the presence of ambient air surrounding the component. The design of such a path 0cc13bf012
