Consequently, the most accurate and visually stunning game of the console generation has brought new levels of nuance to player movement, positioning and interpretation. FIFA 22 continues with its commitment to delivering a FIFA title that offers a true representation of the beautiful game. Players can experience a style of football from four distinct regions in five-star "Ultimate Team" mode where the real-world talent is brought to life by an AI-driven football engine and updated roster updates. FIFA 22 is scheduled for release worldwide on Oct. 4, 2017. Real-World Player Data Influences FIFA 22 Movement and Movement Intelligence The introduction of "HyperMotion Technology" features a new CPU and dedicated physics engine that are based on real-world data collected from FIFA World Cup and UEFA Champions League matches, as well as the improved "FIFA Visual Insight Engine." Players can now feel the impact of each tackle and take the ball with increased speed, while movement looks more accurate than ever before. The reactive physical attributes of the ball have also been improved, creating a more realistic "ball feel" with varying touch characteristics depending on how rough, wet or hard the ball is. The new engine uses a more sophisticated physics model, going beyond what the human eye can see and enabling the player to change their speed and make more complex movements on the pitch. "The new physics engine in FIFA 22 is the most advanced ever used in a FIFA game," said Peter Hintz, EA Sports senior producer. "We spent a lot of time with top players to accurately reflect the way they move and the way the ball moves off their feet. We've improved the speed and power of the ball into a more accurate representation of how players actually move with the ball. "The new engine is also more responsive – allowing players to accelerate faster and make higher impact tackles." The increased level of realism in motion capture technologies means players now move and tackle in more realistic ways. Players can not only move more effectively when tackling, but will also deliver stronger, more powerful headers and shoulder tackles that can knock the ball into space. FIFA 22 is the first game in the series to implement the "HyperMotion Technology" physics engine and the "UEFA Pro Player Conditioning Database" that powered FIFA 19 Real Player Motion. These new technologies work together to make
