Elegant user interface for easy navigation and purchase, and it takes a lot to go wrong. They make good boats; they should be better know. I would very much like to see something like the Santa Cruz Sport or Santa Cruz Broadsider, but they are both similar to the Rebel. They each have a single seat version, a two seat version, and the Broadsider also has a deck option. They also both have lots of accessories, such as rod holders, a cooler, etc. Maybe they should make an updated version of the Broadsider which would be an improved version of the Broadsider. They should keep a very similar hull shape and engine but add some more accessories. It would be similar to the "Just for Two" Range Rover. There are only two minivans but they are the basic models so they would be like an even more simple version of the Rebel if they made an updated two seat. They would have the basic two piece seat and the basic Minimaster glass. It would be very basic with one outrigger. I also agree about the Rogue Hull shape. A couple small tweaks would make a really nice cruiser/sport. I would trade the front rudders for a traditional front skeg and leave the bottom most rudder with a starboard, rear, and port rudder. Not sure if it is possible to have a back rudder (I think it would be difficult to align properly). But the front rudders could be replaced with a skeg like the current version. The aft skeg would look much more like a keel. I think the starboard skeg may be a little small and would need to be replaced with a longer skeg. I doubt you could have a skeg in the center of the hull as it is too low but that would be an interesting option. I do not understand why the Rogue would not have 10' of freeboard for these small boats. The keel and rudder should be mounted much higher than the centerline. The Rogue looks like a keel boat when viewed from above.
