Amazon.com: Book: Zoo-Botanica Aventurica: DSA-Regelerganzung by Adam.Q: Does every graph is closed under taking minors have bounded degree? [Question from the book Graphs and Algorithms by Daniel Král] Let G be a graph. If there exists $k \in \mathbb{N}$ such that G contains no subgraph isomorphic to the complete bipartite graph $K_{k,k}$, then G is called k -closed. Does every k -closed graph G has bounded degree? i.e. there exists $d \in \mathbb{N}$ such that every vertex of G is of degree at most d ? Also, I know that every cacti-free graph is d -closed for every $d \in \mathbb{N}$. A: Yes. Let $C = v_1, v_2, \dots, v_k, v_k, v_1$ be a cycle in your graph. Let A be the set of all vertices that are not in this cycle. Since C is closed under taking minors, you can find a subgraph of the form $K_{2,k}$ in G . Since A is disjoint from this $K_{2,k}$, you can find a path from v_1 to v_k whose internal vertices do not intersect A . It is easy to construct such a path, and by repeating this argument on the remaining $k-2$ vertices of A , you will get a path that has d vertices in total. Common 'lifestyle choices,' including smoking, drinking and poor nutrition, put British people at higher risk of heart disease than their Mediterranean counterparts, new research has claimed. According to Dr Claudia-Maria Frisoli, author of the study, which is due to be published in the medical journal European Heart Journal, there is a link between "western" diets and heart disease, with the average British person at greater risk of heart disease than their Mediterranean counterparts. British men are

Protein-protein interactions between phosphatidylethanolamine-binding protein and H-FABP in the sarcoplasmic reticulum. Ethanolamine- and choline-containing phospholipids (ePC and PC, respectively) are important mediators of intracellular Ca²⁺ release and uptake processes. To examine the role of protein-protein interactions between two phospholipid-binding proteins (PBP), phosphatidylethanolamine-binding protein (PEBP) and H-FABP, we used monoclonal antibodies against each protein. This study used different recombinant proteins, comprised of PEBP-A and PEBP-C together with H-FABP in a two-hybrid system. Our results demonstrated the following: the different domain structure of the two proteins; the binding and interaction between H-FABP and PEBP; and both the recognition and binding sites of these proteins to each other. When full-length PEBP-A and H-FABP were expressed in Escherichia coli, each protein existed as a monomer. When mixed together, they became heteromeric complexes. These complexes were stable in the absence of phospholipids and when complexed with PEBP-C, they formed complexes which were able to interact with PC vesicles as seen by immunofluorescent experiments. Both mixed complexes and purified H-FABP and PEBP-A bound to PC vesicles. These vesicles had a mean size of
