But then there's the city's future. A sprawling industrial zone is home to construction projects under way for another international exhibition, an airport that is scheduled to open in 2020 and a train station that is expected to handle passengers in 2023. In the face of rising demand, one factory that was supposed to build residential units is instead now making concrete blocks for the city's infrastructure. China has been building an economy that can supply the world for decades, and it is on the brink of a new phase of economic growth that has many wondering whether it can continue. Over the past
