Q: C++ Dynamic Array of Objects I'm working on a graph-based algorithm in C++ that involves storing vertices in a dynamic array. The problem is that I'm unsure how to go about this. I know I can make a vector of objects, but I need to be able to dynamically add and delete vertices. The vertex type is written as follows: class Vertex { public: Vertex(int position, int isLeaf); int position; bool isLeaf; }; I'm working with visual studio 2010, so I can't use C++11. A: Create your graph using a vector with a special trait that allows traversal:

#include #include struct Vertex { Vertex(int position, int isLeaf = 0) : position(position), isLeaf(isLeaf) {} int position; bool isLeaf; }; struct VertexTraits { bool operator ==(const Vertex&, const Vertex&) const { return position == position; } bool operator!=(const Vertex&, const Vertex&) const { return!(*this == *other); } }; int main() { std::vector v = {{1, 0}, {2, 1}, {3, 0cc13bf012
