Simple minds and simple souls The life of a good woman in the Republic of Ireland for the past decade would be confusing to many from outside. The first women elected as TDs, when the Dáil opened on November 5th, 1983, they included the Taoiseach's wife, Mary Robinson; sisters Kathleen Mary Arkins (Fine Gael) and Mary Brennan (Labour) and a feminist sociologist named Mary Smyth. But for many of the most obvious, patently insensitive and distinctly unsupportive people, things didn't get any better. Seán MacBride was the former UN high commissioner for refugees (from 1970 to 1975, to be precise), he was a passionate supporter of women's rights and a man with a mission. He married one of them, Mary Robinson, he also went on to marry another of them, Ursula Dodd, a medical doctor, the mother of his three children and the founder of the Irish Association for Women Graduates, whom I'll meet up with later. With the death in January 2009 of his wife Ursula, MacBride was once again reminded of his time in Africa, where he had the honour of attending the death of the Nelson Mandela, and where he had been taken hostage, with his three children by his side, by the ANC rebels. In 1981, Eileen MacBride met her husband after he had been released from eight months of captivity in South Africa. "There is a story he liked to tell of how he had been tied up by two women, arms to head, for eight months in a car. He told her about the time the ANC had taken him hostage, how they had taken him to Johannesburg where there had been some negotiation, of how his daughters had sat between him and the rebels and how he'd had to tell his children that their father was going to be killed. Then Eileen told him about how they had spent one of the last days together. He suggested they might meet for a drink to celebrate. They could never make up their minds what to do, what to drink. He told her they could have a dry Martini and a dry Kir. At first she rejected the idea because she didn't drink alcohol. But it had been a day when he was happy, he was being interviewed for the British 'Panorama' programme, so they ended up having a dry Kir. It was his last drink," MacBride told me

What's New In?

"We're still working on it, but I think it's safe to say," Silver said before Monday's opener of the New York/New Jersey series. "I mean, it's been a gradual thing." The Mets' plan is to have the grass grow over the area within the next month, but they won't have to worry about doing that for an entire season. "We just can't wait for the snow to stop falling in Florida," manager Terry Collins said. "We'll have a couple of days to be in the dugout and actually look out at the field, but we'll be there as soon as we can after the snow stops." Once that happens, the Mets can have the infield and outfield padded down so they are ready to go. That's something they weren't able to do during the World Series, in which Game 4 was played on a similar field with a regular rubber mat. "There are a lot of things that we don't know yet," Collins said. "I feel pretty good about where we are at this point in time, but we'll see how it plays out." After playing on the AstroTurf that broke up in early October, Collins was pleased with how the field felt when he took the club out for batting practice Sunday. "It felt fine," he said. "We didn't do any diving or laying on the ground. It felt fine. We can take a lot of precautions and we did take a lot of precautions." Collins did point out that Shea is often used for high-level events and he would not rule out the possibility that the team could play there again. "With the level of events we played here and the level of organizations that use it, if we ever play here again, I would say at that level, it's going to be a little different," he said. That was the only injury they suffered during the Series and Collins indicated that left-hander Jon Niese could be activated and back in the rotation as early as Monday. But Silver said the plan would be to have Niese back gradually. "He's been here for a week
