Five days after launch, there's already a patch with fixes for .Q: Using Javascript to submit form to a page redirects to the previous page I have a jsfiddle: The problem I'm having is that in IE it is taking me to the first page when you click on the form. I know this has to do with something in the document.onclick method, but I can't figure out what's wrong. Any ideas? A: IE is much stricter than other browsers in requiring the event handler to listen for bubbling as well. So your handler must use document.getElementById("form-submit").addEventListener("click", function (e) { e = e || window.event; e.stopPropagation(); /* the rest of your click handler goes here */ }); (note that the assignment of e to a local copy is not strictly necessary, but I've included it in the code for completeness, and to avoid null-checks later in the handler) In order for your handler to work, you also need to make sure that all of the other forms on the page are a descendant of the form you are dynamically generating: var frm = document.createElement("form"); frm.id = "form-submit"; frm.target = "_blank"; frm.method = "get"; frm.action = ""; document.body.appendChild(frm); and document.
