loss difficulty predict eating disorder symptoms in nonclinical student samples. Possible predictors of eating disorder behaviors were assessed in two samples of nonclinical college women. In the first sample, eating disorder symptomatology was assessed at baseline (T0) and at 6-month follow-up (T1), as were self-reports of eating disorder behaviors and of weight-loss difficulty. In the second sample, self-reports of eating disorder behaviors were assessed at baseline (T0) and at 6- and 18-month follow-up (T1 and T2). In both samples, self-reports of weight-loss difficulty predicted eating disorder behaviors at 6-month follow-up, but not at baseline. In addition, older participants reported significantly more eating disorder behaviors at baseline than younger participants. This study highlights the importance of assessing weight-loss difficulty as a potential risk factor for eating disorder symptoms in non-clinical samples, but indicates that older women should be targeted for eating disorder treatment. | 6d1f23a050
