First, we asked them to keep a happiness record. They were asked to note . . . their happiness at the time on a scale from 0-10. What is the score that best represents . . . Production of interleukin-6 by human monocytes stimulated with lipopolysaccharide and transformed autologous lines of B cells. Our earlier studies suggested that human monocytes, stimulated with lipopolysaccharide (LPS), may be important intermediaries in autologous B cell transformation. Subsequently, however, we failed to detect significant amounts of Interleukin-1 in the LPS-monocyte coculture and in other experiments, we were unable to demonstrate expression of Interleukin-1 in monocytes by immunocytochemistry.

To clarify our observations and to examine IL-6, a monocyte derived cytokine that is involved in B cell activation, here we examined IL-6 levels in supernatants of LPS-stimulated monocyte-B cell cocultures, and in monocyte/lymphoid cultures stimulated with LPS alone. We found that the monocyte/B cell cocultures and LPS-stimulated monocyte cultures consistently produced large amounts of IL-6. Transformed lymphoid cells were not capable of producing IL-6. Furthermore, the addition of mitogen-stimulated autologous lymphoblasts to LPS-stimulated monocytes did not result in IL-6 production. These observations suggest that human monocytes stimulated with LPS are capable of producing IL-6, and, therefore, may be an important intermediary in the autologous transformation of human B cells.
