Q: Prevent Git merge between master and develop We have the following situation: Project: master Develop: develop Development: development Development is the new feature that was completed last week. Master represents the design, while develop contains the code changes. Development is "ready to deliver", but we're not yet ready to merge master into develop. I want to prevent merging from master into develop because we have no changes in develop that was not in master. This prevents merging from master into develop, as in the future, we'll have to take changes from develop again. Is there a way to ensure that we would be able to merge develop into master, but not merge master into develop?

A: No, not really. Merging is about having 2 distinct histories.

Merge means change A and change B, with A and B different between the 2 histories. You have 2 history A and B, with A and B different between the 2 histories, and the idea of merge is of having those 2 histories A and B become 1 single history.

So if A and B are the same in both the histories, you'll merge them, without having a change in master. If A and B are different, the merge is not allowed. You have 2 options for merging without changing master: You have to rebase (or branch) the changes on master

You have to rebase (or branch) the changes on develop In any case, the merge is not allowed.
A: You cannot prevent a merge (that would only be possible if there were no commits on the other branch) - but you can simply disable the merge that would occur. In your situation, on both branches (master and develop), do the following: `git merge --no-commit-message` develop This way you will keep the codebase in the same state as it was before merging, i.e. your merge will not happen. (The only difference to a regular merge is that
