The former big-money free-agent catcher was supposed to take up a spot on the roster, but he proved too good—starting in every one of the Cubs' first 35 games. Ross is a longtime Cubs fan favorite, but a lot of fans don't know much about him. He spent more than a decade in the majors before leaving a career that included three All-Star appearances and three World Series rings with the Reds behind him. At 35, he's still just a backup, making a career-high, $2.7 million in the process. He hasn't been nearly as good as some of the Cubs' starting catchers, as he's hit.142/.154/.190 in 45 games and is a -5.3 WAR in his 56 at-bats. The Cubs also have a half-dozen catchers with at least 50 plate appearances ahead of him on the depth chart, including starters Victor Caratini, Austin Barnes and Daniel Stumpf. Barring a trade, though, Ross will keep wearing the standard-issue black and orange. He's been one of the best surprises of the season, and if he keeps it up, he should be rewarded with a couple more starting jobs.
