English Grammar Guide: of residual cocaine in the brains of fatally poisoned cocaine addicts. A series of fatal cocaine poisonings was correlated with direct measurements of cocaine residues in brains by means of high-performance liquid chromatography with a surface light-scattering detector. Markers in the detection of cocaine included analyte ionization, chromatographic resolution, electrospray ionization, and peak area. All cocaine-positive samples demonstrated positive responses for cocaine metabolites benzoylecgonine, methylecgonine, and ecgonine methyl ester. Brain concentrations of cocaine ranged from 0.01 to 1.5 microg/g and were frequently present in the range of 0.1 to 0.5 microg/g.

Benzoylecgonine concentrations were between 0.6 and 7.3 microg/g and were more variable than those of cocaine. The majority of samples were positive for ecgonine methyl ester and methylecgonine, with concentrations ranging from 0.3 to 11.1 microg/g and 0.4 to 12.9 microg/g, respectively. These levels of cocaine were frequently present in the range of 0.2 to 0.5 microg/g in tissues, with ecgonine methyl ester appearing to be the only metabolite of cocaine detected in these tissues. The findings indicate that this high-performance liquid chromatography/electrospray ionization-based approach is well suited for detecting cocaine residues in dead cocaine-positive subjects and can also detect cocaine metabolites. the crystal structure prediction of hIAPP.
