To see what I mean here is one of the original and still unfixed versions from the past. It was the one that used to work, until I added a log to the keyboard handler, after which it started to complain and crashed when I pressed a key: I'm having the same problem as before. This computer has a USB keyboard connected and it doesn't work under any OS. I can boot from a USB drive. I get to the "Starting Files System" screen, but I can't get it to boot. I've tried rebooting with and without the USB drive plugged in. No luck. I've tried on the other computer as well. I get to the menu but no matter what option I pick, it does nothing. The mouse and keyboard still work. I can even use another bootable USB drive and get to the menu, but still no boot. It's almost like the BIOS just doesn't see the keyboard or the USB drive. I've tried with the "No Secure Boot" option set to "Yes" and "No". That didn't do anything. I don't think it's an option problem because I tried setting it to "No" and still nothing. I've restarted the computer multiple times. Still no boot. I've tried booting from a USB drive with both a 16GB and 32GB flash drive, and both times the computer just goes straight to Windows Explorer without loading Windows at all. None of this is related to the operating system, unless Windows Explorer is doing something. I would have a problem if I couldn't get to the BIOS, but I can't get to the BIOS. I don't think it's a missing driver problem, because the computer isn't even showing up in Device Manager. Character map utility - Get the character map utility software to quickly create phrases in a script by clicking on Unicode characters arranged in a way that aids their identification. The phrase appears at the bottom of the screen and you can easily cut and paste the result into your own document. Character map utilities are likely to be most useful if you don't know a script well enough to use the native keyboard.
