Vp500plotterdriver

The class vp500plotterdriver supports the following hooks: `usrdeps_update`: Called after the update of the USB device data endpoint, and before sending the next packet. `usrdeps_download`: Called before sending the next packet. `usrdeps_complete`: Called when a packet has been completely received. The vp500plotterdriver class does not perform any operations on the driver level. It simply provides the access to the output frames of the USRP Data Profiles class when using the Virtual Platform 500 example, and optionally provides a valid USB interface. The vp500plotterdriver structure is used to retrieve information about the "VP-500" video plotter device in the `/dev/video*` and `/dev/video*ctl*` device files. The related device files are displayed in the Device Manager GUI.

The available fields are as follows: Name The vp500plotterdriver function is used to control the printer on which the plotter is installed. Once the driver has been loaded and initialized, it's opened for operation. Parameters driver: pointer to the driver object containing the printer handle. Returns one of the following values: `XST_SUCCESS` if the driver was successfully opened. `XST_FAILURE` if there was an error during opening the driver. `XST_PRINTER_NOT_SUPPORTED` if the printer is not supported by this driver. `XST_FAILURE` if the driver is not installed or if the printer is not installed.

Note: The driver and printer handle are deallocated when the driver pointer is set to NULL.
