Additionally, password generators in Enpass browsers ensure that users aren't using the same password across multiple websites, making their credentials more difficult to guess. Users can set a two-factor authentication PIN or time-based one-time password to prevent unauthorized access if their systems are compromised. Overall, Enpass vault and browser extensions are both high value and easy to use, making it easy for users to organize and customize their passwords and other personal information. Enpass users can easily set up their primary vault by creating, with Enpass help, a strong master password and going through a quick email registration process. Bulk importing passwords can be a little tricky, as users must navigate to the apps import settings and must use a CSV or Excel file to import data not available for import through another password manager or a browser other than Chrome.

The app supports Windows, Linux, and macOS desktops, and users who pay to use Enpass on their mobile phones can use the cloud storage software of their choice to sync data between multiple devices and the web. Cloud storage possibilities include Dropbox, iCloud, Google Drive, OneDrive, Box, WebDAV and Nextcloud.

Users should note, however, that Enpass cloud syncing feature is not automatic; once they sync their device with a cloud service, they must make sure to manually set each of their devices to sync with the cloud. Overall, Enpass vault and browser extensions are both high value and easy to use, making it easy for users to organize and customize their passwords and other personal information.
