· Forex Pivot Points is an .NET framework application that calculates pivot points for various forex time frames and gives the maximum likelihood of a trade. You need to install the 4.6.2 version or later of the .NET Framework. · Forex Pivot Points is an automated trading tool designed to assist traders in shorting stocks during the day and in longing stocks during the night. · Pivot Points work by calculating the high, low, and close prices for each day in a given timeframe and then calculating the price for the next day using the same formulas described above. This application was written in C#.NET so you will need to have a compatible version of .NET installed to run the application. · During each day, the application will look at the high, low, and close prices for that day. It then uses that information to calculate the Pivot Point (R1, R2, R3, and S1, S2, S3) for that day. · The application can be run on both Microsoft Windows and Linux platforms. The demo version of this application provides the ability to look at pivot points for four different timeframes: A. Daily B. 4 Hourly C. 15 Minute D. 30 Minute (Note: The application does not include the ability to calculate 60 minute and hourly pivot points.) · The application also allows you to input a date range to look at pivot points for a specific period. This feature is available in the demo version of the application and does not show up in the full version of the application. · From the application screen, you can select the type of price to look at when calculating pivot points (Actual, Average, or Maximum). · The application also allows you to select the type of data to use to calculate the pivot points (Close, Open, High, Low). · Once the data has been selected, you can optionally select the period for that data to be pulled from. · Once you have selected the data and the period, you can move on to the next screen and view the Pivot Points for the data and period that you selected. · The application supports two different layouts for the look up table: A. Line Graph B. Area Graph · Pivot Points is meant to be a tool that should be used as part of an overall approach to trading. · When analyzing the markets, you should look for resistance and support levels that are most likely to
