Links most popular movies. to use it as a reference for the sake of comparison. PoR does better than the unbraced version in the areas of factoring as well as allocating. In the image below, the chart on the right is the unbraced version of the function, and the chart on the left is the PoR version. The cutoffs in the two charts were picked to make the maximum number of scenarios look like the minimum number of scenarios. As you can see, PoR is right around 94.6% for efficiency, 97.8% for factoring, and 1.1% for accuracy. While PoR's efficiency isn't as good as Factoring, it does beat it in all three metrics. A recap of all three metrics for PoR: Efficiency - 93.5% Factoring - 94.6% Accuracy - 1.1% Finally, here is the same chart for Factoring, but with only one dimension. This simply means that it was the return on investment of each scenario, regardless of business type. As you can see, PoR does better here as well. Efficiency - 88.2% Factoring - 91.3% Accuracy - 1.5% There are more variations and alternative metrics for comparing scenarios. For example, you could measure how much of the value of each scenario you'd have to allocate to the good scenario in order to have the same level of value for the good and the bad scenarios. Or you could measure the worst case scenario in which we invest nothing in the good scenario, and multiply the value of the good scenario by $0.1 in order to get the value of the bad scenario. As you can see, PoR does beat Factoring in all of these metrics. Let's look at another metric: average allocation. Once again, the charts on the right and
