Let's rewind a minute. Many of you remember the early days of the web. You'd hear about video conferencing, multiplayer gaming, and fast-loading websites and applications from the 1990s. This was the era of a different quality of experience and expectations—before HTML5, before the web fully became a platform for applications. In those days, we heard something similar from Adobe. The one big objection was that the web couldn't deliver Photoshop. What was going to happen to my Photoshop? We expected people would keep Photoshop on their desktop. The latest version of Adobe Creative Cloud, the Creative Cloud Utility, is now available. Adobe CC is as much a toolset of applications as it is a suite of subscription services, and the follow-up to 2017's update is no exception. In addition to all the new features in Photoshop, other updates for the future include a 2GB file size limit for the new PSD format itself. The limit is in place to prevent super high resolution images from filling up entire hard drives. When exporting to PSD files, users will be able to select a file size limit of up to 2GB. This is in addition to the existing 2MB limit on exporting to the file format. Users will be able to adjust file size limits within Photoshop preferences. These file sizes are also available in existing PSD files. Adobe has made a major overhaul to its Software Builder spreadsheet, introducing many new features. It now offers performance recommendations, custom workflows, and the ability to simply view the spreadsheet itself, not needing to download the file. It can also be reinstalled at any time, rather than needing a full download's worth of software to switch to. A new tab page has also been added which allows users to quickly and easily view desired information for a project. A new security warning has also been added, warning about potential vulnerabilities in the application. Along with the release of Photoshop CC 2019, Adobe has made several new YouTube videos to highlight new features, such as database management, and better support for the production of logos, websites, and advertisements.
